

LETTERS

DeParle's article describes perfectly a major flaw in the welfare reform law. The law makes no provision for mental illness or substance abuse that typically make it almost impossible for people to move, in a straightforward ascent, to a productive work life. Perhaps the law, in its stubborn blindness to such realities, is expressing an irrational wish to "punish" people into mental health.

LISA M. NAJAVITS

Boston